Pan-African Studies professor Joseph Holloway oversees the Boniface I. Obichere Library and Institute with help from a special collections expert from the Cal State Northridge library. Holloway said the center will continue the work of the internationally known scholar who had vast knowledge of world history, but was particularly well versed in the culture, politics and economics of Africa and blacks in America. David L. Horne, Chair, Pan-African Studies Department, said he and Holloway visited Obichere before the Nigerian professor died of prostate cancer in March (1997). At his deathbed, they promised to take care of the material and turn it into a working resource for students.
