The love for justice that is in us is not only the best part of our being but it is also the most true to our nature.—Cesar Chavez

Cesar Estrada Chavez was born March 31, 1927 in Yuma, Arizona, and died April 23, 1993 in San Luis, Arizona, a great Mexican-American who was recognized by Robert Kennedy as having “made a major contribution to American society and culture”. He strived to improve the lives of ordinary working Americans. We should acknowledge the sons and daughters of immigrants who work in our fields, cultivate our vegetables and fruit to those who died on the Normandy (France) beaches, World War II, Desert Storm and in Iraq. On March 31st, the day the United Farm Workers union was created and co-founded with Dolores Huerta asks us to celebrate the life of Cesar Chavez. He has transcended but he is alive in spirit.
